CANVAS-BACK DUCKS.

They Can Fly Two Miles a Minute and Can Keep it Up.

Dr. Charles Macrum, a wealthy retired physician of Portland, Ore., for the last three years has devoted his time to hunting and fishing and writing stories for sporting papers. The doc-For two years I suffered terribly tor has made a study of the speed of with stomach trouble, and was for the duck and says the canvas-back can all that time under treatment by a fly faster than any other member of the

The doctor tells some interesting stories about his hunting experiences. When hunting near Madison, Wis., last fall he had a narrow escape from being killed by the body of a duck which had fallen at his feet from the air about 200 yards above him.

"A duck sometimes when wounded will circle around in the air and try to get as high up as possible," said the and it started to circle upward directly over my head. I had a charge of buckshot in the other barrel and before it got out of range I fired. One of the bullets must have struck a vital part, for it came down instantly. It was directly above me and had I not dodged my head just in time its body would have struck me square upon the head. It whizzed past my ear with terrific force and fell at my side. There was not a bone in its body that was not broken when I attempted to pick it up. I am certain the blow would have suburts and formed what it calls the crushed my skull had the body struck me on the top of the head.

"A friend of mine named Bancroft, when duck hunting in Florida, also had a close call. It was just getting dark, and we were waiting in our boats behind a pile of weeds, for the ducks to appear. We heard something come buzzing over the lake and my friend suddenly raised himself in his boat to see what it was. It was a teal duck. The bird must have been going at the rate of 150 miles an hour. Just as Bancroft looked up the duck struck him in the forehead and knocked him over into the water. The blow was so hard it stunned him and had I not been there to pull him out he certainly would have drowned. The blow killed the duck. When I fished it out of the water I found that the bird's breastbone was broken."

Mrs. Macrum is with her husband. She always travels with him on his hunting excursions. She is also an expert shot. One day in the lakes near Madison she killed forty-eight ducks.

of small education give to each other. How does it injure one woman to have another woman a little blacker or pooror, or clumsier than herself called a "lady?" It signifies that the poor woman wishes to be thought and spoken of with respect, and who ought to complain of that? Jefferson once took off his hat to a negro, while his young grandson rode along without noticing the salutation of the poor man. "My child," said the Virginia gentleman, would you be outdone, in politeness by a negro?" Perhaps if a little more respect were shown by the fortunate to the less fortunate there would be less complaint of the rudeness of manners and the misplacing of

Some newspapers are very scrupulous to bestow titles-"the Hon.," the Rev." and the like. Now a title which is not legally a man's wight can only be given him by courtesy; and there is as much vulgarity in sticking these petty titles before a man's name as in calling a washer woman 'a lady." The foolish designation of "Esq." for all men is going out of use, and it is now thought proper to entitle every man "Mr." Where real distinction of rank exists these titles mean something; where equality outwardly prevails the only sensible distinctions are those which manners and conduct make. I have never observed that there was any difficulty in distinguishing well-bred and well-behaved persons from their opposites; nature takes care of that.

The outward distinction conferred by the titles of "lord," "lady," "duke," "prince." or the American brevets of "judge." "general." "colonel." etc., had and still have an importance; but this cannot be increased by writing about them. The names impose on our imagination a little, but when we recollect that Talleyrand was a prince and John Howard only an esquire, we see that they do not mean much for posterity.-Boston Advertiser.
